[§] Hata, Izawa and Ichimura were born in the 1930's and experienced WWII as adolescents. Their works are highly detailed and comprehensive in their narratives. Given the authors' academic backgrounds and the depth of their research, it is evident that they utilized a wide array of primary and secondary sources. These include official military records, pilot logbooks, personal diaries, interviews with surviving airmen, and contemporaneous reports. Their meticulous documentation and cross-referencing of aerial engagements and pilot experiences suggest a robust foundation of source material.
